conservation of small populations: microevolution and adaptive divergence in relict bear populations" - Funded by the European Union - Next Generation EU - CUP J53D23006690006, for which Professor Ian Marc Bonapace is responsible,

DECREES

Art. 1 - Object

A selection procedure by qualifications is hereby opened for the assignment of n. 1 departmental research grant with a duration of 12 months for the Scientific-Disciplinary Sector BIOS-10/A Cell and Applied Biology, in the Department of Biotechnology and Life Sciences.

Research Title: "Transcriptome profiling of the small and isolated Marsican bear population: implications of gene expression for the health and conservation of the species".

Research Project: "The overall aim of the project is to use the integration of genomic, epigenomic and transcriptomic profiles to characterize Evolutionary Significant Units, clues of local adaptation and evidence of inbreeding depression in small populations of endangered bear species.

Specifically, the winner will analyse the whole blood large-scale transcriptomes of brown bear populations of the Italian Alpine area and of the low number, highly inbred and endangered bear population of the Italian Apennines, to investigate whether gene expression alterations in the Marsican bear population in physiopathological pathways, with emphasis on the immune system, could help to understand: 1) how the species has survived over the centuries, despite a small number of specimens; 2) whether alterations involved in the regulation, activation and deregulation of immune system pathways and of diseases pathways have influenced the adaptation of the species to the environment."

The research will be carried out in the Department of Biotechnology and Life Sciences of the University of Insubria.

Research Coordinator: Professor Ian Marc Bonapace.
